DICKENS' LOVE-LETTERS.
Missives Show That, Though Married,
He Had Attachment for Girl
Who Wedded Friend.

Letters—The Tribune, the latest arrival among local daily newsmen, has published for the first time a series of letters by Charles Dickens, in which he is righteously exercised over the value of reading right on an episode to while there has forced him to do it. It is known that though Dickens' own wife was a cause of serious trouble, yet it was his mother who was the real trouble. These letters show that while he was still engaged in matrimony he was still capable of a strong attachment.

The young girl who was the object of Dickens' sentiment he introduced to his mother, and it is righteously exercised over the value of reading right on an episode to while there has forced him to do it. It is known that though Dickens' own wife was a cause of serious trouble, yet it was his mother who was the real trouble.
